PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on July 17, 2019 or as soon thereafter as they may be heard before Magistrate Judge Nathanael M. Cousins, Plaintiffs will hereby and do move pursuant to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Civil Local Rules 7-2 and 65-2 for a preliminary injunction prohibiting Defendants from enforcing the Final Rule of the Department of Health and Human Services entitled Protecting Statutory Conscience Rights in Health Care, 84 Fed. Reg. 23,170 (May 21, 2019) (to be codified at 45 C.F.R. Pt. 88). Without an order from this Court, the Rule will take effect on July 22, 2019, and will cause Plaintiffs to suffer irreparable harm. MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs challenge a regulation, promulgated by the Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”), that sets out comprehensive new rules for accommodating religious objections in the healthcare context (“the Denial-of-Care Rule” or “Rule”). The Denial-of-Care Rule is

1 unlawful, and it will hurt people across the United States. This Court should enter a preliminary 2 nationwide injunction to freeze the status quo rather than allowing the Rule to take effect.

3 Over a period of decades, Congress has adopted context-specific statutes to address 4 individuals and entities that do not wish to participate in certain medical procedures or research
5 based on religious or moral objections. These provisions exist against the backdrop of federal laws 6 that protect access to medical treatment, ensure that patients can obtain the information necessary 7 to give informed consent, and prohibit discrimination in the provision of healthcare services.
8 Hospitals and other healthcare organizations have complied with those laws by carefully crafting 9 policies that accommodate religious objections while ensuring that patients receive care.

10 The Rule completely upends the existing regime by elevating religious objections over the 11 obligation to provide care, even in emergency situations. Through a number of prohibitions and 12 extremely broad definitions, the Rule greatly expands both the universe of healthcare workers who 13 may decline to serve patients based on religious objections, and the activities to which they may 14 object. The Rule specifically invites individuals to refuse to provide care to women seeking 15 reproductive healthcare and to lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (“LGBT”) individuals, 16 especially transgender and gender-nonconforming patients seeking gender-affirming and 17 transition-related care.

18 The Rule severely limits providers’ ability to plan for denials of care based on employees’ 19 religious objections. Providers must make immediate policy and staffing changes to try to comply.
20 And the Rule authorizes HHS to impose draconian penalties for noncompliance. If HHS believes 21 that a provider (or any contractor or subrecipient of federal funding) has violated the Rule, it can 22 cut off and claw back all of the provider’s federal funding. Worst of all, the Rule has no exception 23 for emergencies. Indeed, HHS expressly acknowledged that the Rule may result in patients being 24 denied lifesaving care, but decided that accommodating religious objections was more important.

25 Health care organizations, doctors, and patients throughout the country will be severely and 26 adversely affected by the Rule. Plaintiffs here are among them. Plaintiffs include the County of 27 Santa Clara (“County”), which operates several hospitals, clinics, a Public Health Department, an 28 emergency medical response system, a behavioral health department, and a health insurance plan;

1 five private healthcare facilities across the country that provide reproductive-health services and 2 healthcare services for LGBT individuals; four individual physicians and a licensed counselor who 3 work for these entities; three national associations of medical professionals; and two organizations 4 that provide a wide range of services to the LGBT community. They share a common objective of 5 maintaining an effective, functioning healthcare system, one that protects patients’ right of access 6 to health services and dignity while respecting healthcare workers’ religion-based objections.

7 The Denial-of-Care Rule is a paradigmatic example of arbitrary and capricious agency 8 action, because HHS failed to appropriately account for harm to patients or to address how 9 providers can ensure continuity of care while complying with the Rule. It directly conflicts with 10 existing federal laws prohibiting discrimination in healthcare and protecting access to care and 11 information. And it goes well beyond the federal statutes on which it is purportedly based. The 12 Rule also is unconstitutional because it favors religion over nonreligion and certain religious beliefs 13 over others; jeopardizes access to reproductive and transition-related healthcare; fosters unlawful 14 discrimination; chills protected expression; and exceeds Congress’s Spending Clause authority.
15 Plaintiffs, their members, and their patients will suffer irreparable, nationwide harm if the Rule 16 goes into effect. This Court should enjoin the Rule.

17 STATEMENT OF FACTS

18 A. Congress’s Consideration Of Religious Objections And The Needs Of Patients

19 A number of federal laws ensure that patients receive prompt and nondiscriminatory access 20 to medical care. They include the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (“ACA”), which 21 prohibits the Secretary of HHS from promulgating any regulation that impedes timely access to 22 healthcare, creates unreasonable barriers to receiving care, or restricts the ability of providers to 23 provide healthcare information to patients, 42 U.S.C. § 18114, and prohibits discrimination in the 24 provision of healthcare services, 42 U.S.C. § 18116. They also include the Emergency Medical 25 Treatment and Labor Act (“EMTALA”), which requires hospitals to either treat or transfer patients 26 in unstable medical conditions. 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(b)(1); see 42 U.S.C. § 18023(d) (reiterating 27 that healthcare providers must “provid[e] emergency services as required by State or Federal law”).
28

1 Against this backdrop, Congress has enacted statutes that prohibit discrimination against 2 individuals and entities that refuse, based on religious beliefs or moral convictions, to participate 3 in certain medical procedures, training, or research. HHS relies on those statutes as the basis for the 4 Denial-of-Care Rule. Each statute was enacted to address a particular, limited context. None of 5 them overrides the statutes that protect access to information and care; prohibit discrimination 6 against patients; and require healthcare providers to treat patients in emergency situations.

7 For example, the Weldon Amendment addresses persons and entities who do not wish to 8 participate in abortion care. It states that no funds appropriated under a particular appropriations 9 statute “may be made available to a Federal agency or program, or to a State or local government,” 10 if the recipient “subjects any institutional or individual healthcare entity to discrimination on the 11 basis that the healthcare entity does not provide, pay for, provide coverage of, or refer for 12 abortions.” Pub. L. 115-245, § 507(d)(1), 132 Stat. 2981, 3118 (2018). The Coats-Snowe 13 Amendment addresses the more specific context of training to provide abortion. It states, among 14 other things, that “[t]he Federal Government, and any State or local government that receives 15 Federal financial assistance,” may not discriminate against a healthcare entity because “the entity 16 refuses to undergo training in the performance of induced abortions,” “to require or provide such 17 training,” “to perform such abortions,” “to provide referrals for such training or such abortions,” or 18 “to make arrangements” for them. 42 U.S.C. § 238n(a)(1), (a)(2).

19 The Church Amendments arose in the context of biomedical research. Among other 20 requirements, they prohibit recipients of “biomedical or behavioral research” funds from 21 discriminating against personnel because they performed or assisted in the performance of a 22 research or healthcare activity, or refused to do so because of “religious beliefs or moral 23 convictions.” 42 U.S.C. § 300a-7(c)(2). They also prohibit recipients of certain federal funds from 24 discriminating in employment against physicians or health care personnel because they “performed 25 or assisted in the performance of a lawful sterilization procedure or abortion” or refused to do so, 26 id. § 300a-7(c)(1), and prohibit recipients of certain federal funds from discriminating against 27 applicants for training or study based on their “reluctance, or willingness, to counsel, suggest, 28 recommend, assist, or in any way participate in abortions or sterilizations,” id. § 300a-7(e). Finally,

1 they provide that “[n]o individual shall be required to perform or assist in the performance of any 2 part of a health service program or research activity funded . . . under a program administered by 3 [HHS]” if the activity “would be contrary to his religious beliefs or moral convictions.” Id. § 300a-4 7(d).¹

5 Each of these statutes is carefully worded and narrowly drawn. None purports to extend an 6 all-purpose religious-objection right to every person employed by a healthcare provider. And 7 Congress has never suggested that religious objections take priority over the needs of patients or 8 the healthcare system.

9 B. The Administration’s Decision To Disrupt The Existing Scheme By 10 Promulgating The Denial-of-Care Rule

11 The Trump Administration promulgated the Rule as the centerpiece of an aggressive plan 12 to favor religious objectors over patients. On January 18, 2018, the Acting Secretary of HHS 13 established a new Conscience and Religious Freedom Division in the agency’s Office for Civil 14 Rights (“OCR”). The next week, the Acting Secretary proposed the Rule. 83 Fed. Reg. 3880 (Jan.
 15 26, 2018).

16 More than 242,000 comments were filed by medical associations, medical providers, civil-17 rights organizations, state and local governments, and others. See 84 Fed. Reg. 23,170, 23,180 &
 18 n.41 (May 21, 2019). Many of those comments were critical of the Rule. The comments explained 19 that the Rule’s expansive new provisions would upset well-developed practices by healthcare 20 providers, medical schools, and other healthcare organizations that respect religious objections 21 without compromising patient care. E.g., American Medical Association (“AMA”) Cmt. Ltr. 3, 5 22 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-70564).² They also explained that the Rule conflicts with federal and state 23 nondiscrimination and emergency-care laws, and that the Rule will cause providers to deny 24 healthcare, including lifesaving care, to patients, particularly patients seeking reproductive 25 healthcare and LGBT patients. See, e.g., AMA Cmt. Ltr. 5-6; Cnty. of Santa Clara Cmt. Ltr. 4-8

3 On May 21, 2019, HHS published the final Rule, with only modest changes from the 4 proposed Rule. See Protecting Statutory Conscience Rights in Health Care, 84 Fed. Reg. 23,170 5 (May 21, 2019) (to be codified at 45 C.F.R. Pt. 88). Although HHS’s mission is to “enhance the 6 health and well-being of all Americans,” HHS, Introduction: About HHS, 7 <http://www.hhs.gov/about/strategic-plan/introduction/index.html>, in promulgating the Rule HHS 8 decided that its “singular and critical responsibility” was “to vigorously enforce” federal religious-9 objection laws. 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,178. Despite many concerns raised in the comments, HHS did 10 not sufficiently address what providers must do to comply with the Rule and what options providers 11 have to ensure continuity of care, especially in emergency circumstances. Id. at 23,183, 23,191-12 23,192.

13 C. What The Denial-Of-Care Rule Does

14 The Rule goes well beyond the narrowly drawn statutes that Congress enacted to address 15 religion-based objections. It creates a new regime that vastly expands the power of religious 16 objectors at the expense of providers, physicians, and patients. The Rule does this by repeating 17 statutory prohibitions and then defining key statutory terms broadly (more broadly than Congress 18 intended) and applying them across-the-board, rather than in the limited contexts Congress 19 specified. The resulting Rule is completely unmoored from the statutes purportedly authorizing it.

20 The Rule prohibits all recipients of federal funding from requiring any “individual to 21 perform or assist in the performance of any part of a health service program or research activity” 22 if that performance or assistance would be contrary to the person’s religious or moral beliefs. 84 23 Fed. Reg. at 23,265, § 88.3(a)(2)(vi) (emphasis added). The Rule’s definitions expand this 24 prohibition to reach virtually any person or activity in some way tied to a healthcare procedure.
25 “Individual” may include any member of an entity’s “workforce,” id. at 23,199, and “workforce” 26 includes any “employee[], volunteer[], trainee[], [or] contractor” subject to the control of, or 27 holding privileges with, a healthcare entity. Id. at 23,264, § 88.3. “Assist in the performance” is not 28 limited to direct participation in a patient’s medical treatment. Instead, it means taking any action

1 “that has a specific, reasonable, and articulable connection to furthering a procedure or a part of a 2 health service program or research activity undertaken by or with another person or entity,” and 3 may include “counseling, referral, training, or otherwise making arrangements for the procedure.”
4 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,263, § 88.2 (emphasis added). “Referral,” in turn, includes giving any 5 information in virtually any form if the “purpose or reasonably foreseeable outcome” is to “assist 6 a person in receiving funding or financing for, training in, obtaining, or performing a particular 7 health care service, program, activity, or procedure.” Id. at 23,264, § 88.2.

8 Together, these provisions invite individuals who are only tangentially involved in patient 9 care to raise religion-based objections and deny patients needed care and information. Objections 10 may be raised by a receptionist who schedules appointments, a janitor who prepares an operating 11 room, an orderly who assists patients in the recovery room, or an ambulance driver who transports 12 a patient to the hospital. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,186-23,187. And these objections may be to virtually 13 any healthcare-related task, including providing information about treatment options; escorting 14 patients to treatment areas; cleaning or restocking treatment rooms, ambulances, or other facilities; 15 providing, collecting, or filing forms related to patients’ health history or insurance information; 16 billing or administering insurance reimbursements; and even scheduling appointments.

17 The Rule also prohibits “discrimination” against individuals and entities that assert certain 18 religious objections. See, e.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,265-23,266, §§ 88.3(a)(2)(iv)-(vi), (b)(2) and 19 (c)(2) (emphasis added). The Rule defines “discriminate” to include virtually any negative action—20 including any action to “withhold, reduce, exclude from, terminate, restrict, or make unavailable or 21 deny” any “position,” “status,” “benefit,” or “privilege” in employment, or to use any “policies[] 22 or procedures” that subject an individual or entity to “any adverse treatment.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 23 23,263, § 88.2.

24 The definition includes carve-outs for accommodating objections, but those provisions 25 severely constrain the ability of healthcare entities to ensure that patients receive needed care. For 26 example, the Rule says that an employee may “voluntarily accept[]” an accommodation offered by 27 the employer, id., but it does not authorize employers to impose reasonable accommodations over 28 an employee’s objections, even when necessary to protect patients’ health. The Rule also limits

1 employers' ability to identify potential objections in advance. A covered entity may require a 2 worker to inform it of his or her objections, but only if objections are reasonably likely, and the 3 entity can inquire about objections only "after . . . hiring" the worker and "once per calendar year 4 thereafter, unless supported by a persuasive justification." Id. And on its face, the Rule precludes 5 providers from requiring objectors to cooperate in ensuring that patients receive appropriate care
6 and information. See id. (a covered entity may "use alternate staff or methods to provide or further 7 any objected-to conduct" only if the entity "does not require any additional action by" the objector).

8 The Rule targets reproductive healthcare and healthcare to LGBT patients. It contemplates 9 that employees may object to tasks even tangentially related to abortion and to emergency treatment 10 of life-threatening ectopic pregnancies. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,186-23,188. And it repeatedly 11 characterizes medically necessary healthcare procedures sought by transgender patients to treat 12 gender dysphoria as "sterilization," inviting religious and moral objections to providing that care.
13 See id. at 23,178 (citing Minton v. Dignity Health, No. 17-558259 (Calif. Super. Ct. Apr. 19, 2017), 14 involving a Catholic hospital's attempt to block a transgender patient's hysterectomy, which was 15 part of a course of treatment for gender dysphoria); see also id. at 23,205. Equating treatment for 16 gender dysphoria with "sterilization" is medically inaccurate and contrary to the plain meaning of 17 the term, and it endorses a particular religious view of gender identity. Ettner Decl. ¶ 46. Procedures 18 undertaken for the purpose of sterilization are distinct from procedures undertaken for other 19 purposes that incidentally affect reproductive function. Id.; Valle Decl. ¶ 13. For some transgender 20 people who desire children, reproduction may be possible even after completing treatment for 21 gender dysphoria. Ettner Decl. ¶ 47; Valle Decl. ¶ 13.

22 Significantly, the Rule contains no emergency exceptions. No emergency exceptions appear 23 on the face of the Rule, and the Rule's disapproval of cases and a medical-ethics opinion requiring 24 medical personnel to provide emergency care makes clear that HHS intends for religious objections 25 to take precedence over saving patients' lives. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,176; 83 Fed. Reg. at 3888.
26 Although serious concerns were raised during the notice-and-comment period about the need to 27 provide emergency care, HHS's only response is that it will evaluate those situations on a case-by-28 case basis. 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,176. Of course, by then it will be too late for some patients.

1 The Rule threatens entities with severe penalties. It authorizes withdrawal and clawback of 2 all federal funding, even for programs unrelated to healthcare. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,180; id. at 3 23,271, § 88.7(i). And it holds healthcare providers responsible not only for their own violations of 4 the Rule, but also any violations by contractors or subrecipients. See id. at 23,270, § 88.6(a); id. at 5 23,207. The Rule mandates investigations whenever “any information” demonstrates a 6 “threatened” or “potential” violation, id. at 23,271, § 88.7(d), which may include review of 7 confidential information. Id. at 23,271, § 88.6(c). The Rule provides no mechanisms for notice, a 8 hearing, or an appeal before HHS terminates or withholds funds. Id. at 23,271-23,272, § 88.7(h)(2).
 9 OCR “will consider an entity’s voluntary posting of a notice of nondiscrimination” including its 10 recommended text as “non-dispositive evidence of compliance.” Id. at 23,270, § 88.5. But posting 11 of the notice is only nondispositive evidence of compliance. There is no safe harbor—not for 12 providers, not for doctors, and not for patients.

13 D. How The Denial-Of-Care Rule Will Harm Doctors, Patients, and Healthcare
 14 Providers

15 The Denial-of-Care Rule will severely harm Plaintiffs, their members, and their patients.
 16 And these effects will be felt by healthcare providers and patients nationwide.

17 Put simply, the Rule will hurt people, and likely kill some of them. HHS envisioned that 18 any worker who objects to a certain patient or the patient’s requested healthcare procedure may 19 refuse to participate in the patient’s treatment. As a result, some patients will not receive necessary 20 information and care, including time-sensitive and emergency care—putting their health at 21 substantial risk.

22 The Rule increases the likelihood that patients will be turned away, without a referral or 23 even basic information about their condition or treatment options. When a patient is turned away, 24 that person (at the very least) will have to incur additional costs and burdens to try to find a willing 25 provider of the needed healthcare. Lorenz Decl. ¶ 24; McNicholas Decl. ¶ 31; Cummings Decl. ¶ 9.
 26 Those burdens will fall most heavily on low-income individuals. Bolan Decl. ¶ 2; Cummings Decl.
 27 ¶¶ 3-4. Some patients will not receive the necessary treatment—either because they cannot obtain 28 it in time, because they do not have the resources to obtain it somewhere else, or because there is

1 no other provider in the area. Shanker Decl. ¶ 5; Valle Decl. ¶ 5; Cummings Decl. ¶ 11. And being 2 turned away is a potentially traumatizing and stigmatizing experience. Shafi Decl. ¶ 18; Valle Decl.
3 ¶ 15; Bolan Decl. ¶¶ 6-9; Henn Decl. ¶ 3; McNicholas Decl. ¶ 44; Ettner Decl. ¶¶ 48, 56. These 4 harms will be especially acute for patients seeking reproductive healthcare and for LGBT patients.
5 HHS knows this: It cited examples of individuals objecting to reproductive care and care sought by 6 LGBT individuals as evidence of the need for the Rule. 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,176 & n.27.

7 The Rule threatens to impede or eliminate access to abortion and contraception. Burkhart 8 Decl. ¶¶ 24-28; Backus Decl. ¶¶ 27-28. Abortion is a common and safe medical procedure.
9 McNicholas Decl. ¶¶ 28, 30. Yet there is a national shortage of abortion providers in the United 10 States, and their numbers are shrinking. McNicholas Decl. ¶¶ 19-21; Backus Decl. ¶ 8. As a result, 11 many patients already must travel long distances (and incur associated costs and delays) to obtain 12 care. Phelps Decl. ¶ 18. Delays in obtaining an abortion compound the logistical and financial 13 burdens that patients face and substantially increase the health risks to patients. Phelps Decl. ¶ 18; 14 McNicholas Decl. ¶ 30. If the Rule goes into effect, the United States will see an even more 15 dramatic reduction in the number of large medical institutions that provide abortions and that teach 16 students and residents about them. Phelps Decl. ¶ 30; Backus Decl. ¶¶ 38-39.

17 The Rule imposes particular burdens on LGBT individuals, and especially transgender and 18 gender-nonconforming individuals. LGBT people already face acute health disparities and barriers 19 to care, problems which will be compounded by the Rule. Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 5-10; Ettner Decl.
20 ¶¶ 55-56; Cummings Decl. ¶¶ 8-11. A majority of LGBT patients fear going to healthcare providers 21 because of past experiences of anti-LGBT bias in healthcare. Shanker Decl. ¶ 8; Ettner Decl. ¶ 55;
22 Henn Decl. ¶ 3; Vargas Decl. ¶ 5; Bolan Decl. ¶ 9; Cummings Decl. ¶ 9. Many LGBT patients 23 report hostility, discrimination, and denials of care when they disclosed to healthcare providers 24 their sexual orientation, history of sexual conduct, gender identity, transgender status, or past 25 gender-affirming medical treatment. Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 6-10; Henn Decl. ¶¶ 3, 6-8; Bolan Decl. ¶¶ 6-26 9; Carpenter Decl. ¶ 5; Cummings Decl. ¶ 12; Vargas Decl. ¶¶ 4, 13; McNicholas Decl. ¶ 26; Ettner 27 Decl. ¶ 55. LGBT patients are disproportionately likely to delay preventive screenings and 28 necessary medical treatment, which results in more acute health problems and more adverse

1 outcomes. Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 8-12; Henn Decl. ¶ 3; Bolan Decl. ¶¶ 6-9; Carpenter Decl. ¶ 6; Manley
2 Decl. ¶ 8; Cummings Decl. ¶¶ 9, 12. The Rule makes it more likely that these patients will be denied 3 care or will avoid seeking care altogether, which will hurt not only the patients but also public 4 health. Bolan Decl. ¶ 11; Cummings Decl. ¶ 9; Henn Decl. ¶¶ 3, 6. The Rule also encourages these 5 patients to remain closeted when seeking medical care, which similarly harms patients and public
6 health. Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 11-12; Vargas Decl. ¶ 14; Henn Decl. ¶ 5; Bolan Decl. ¶¶ 8-10; Carpenter
7 Decl. ¶ 11; Manley Decl. ¶ 8; Harker Decl. ¶ 14; Cummings Decl. ¶¶ 13-14.

8 Under the Rule, healthcare providers, including the County of Santa Clara, will face serious 9 impediments to providing high-quality and timely healthcare. First, they will immediately have to 10 reevaluate and rewrite their existing religious-objection, staffing, and emergency policies. See 11 Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 19-20; Miller Decl. ¶ 7; Butler Decl. ¶ 5; Singh Decl. ¶ 7; Sproul Decl. ¶¶ 4-6; 12 Tullys Decl. ¶ 9. They also will need to inquire as to the conscience objections of the many 13 employees, contractors, and volunteers who are newly covered under the Rule. For example, Santa 14 Clara Valley Medical Center, a hospital operated by the County, has a policy allowing current and 15 prospective medical staff and employees to request in writing not to participate in certain patient 16 care that conflicts with staff members' cultural values, ethics, or religious beliefs, with the 17 understanding that medical emergencies take precedence over personal beliefs. Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 11, 18 18; Nguyen Decl. ¶ 4. If the County can no longer rely on all staff to provide care in an emergency, 19 it will have to consider whether backup or double staffing is necessary to protect patient welfare, 20 which will strain the hospital's budget. Nguyen Decl. ¶ 6; Lorenz Decl. ¶ 19. Other aspects of the 21 Rule also conflict with the County's policies and operational needs and could undermine patient 22 care. Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 15-17, 20-21; Nguyen Decl. ¶ 7. And if despite a provider's best efforts, an 23 OCR official believes that the provider failed to comply, the provider could lose all Medicare and 24 Medicaid reimbursements and other federal funding—which obviously would affect its ability to 25 continue providing care to patients. Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 22-24; Tullys Decl. ¶ 8; Cody Decl. ¶¶ 12-22.

26 The Rule imposes special challenges for providers specializing in reproductive healthcare 27 and healthcare for LGBT individuals. Like the County, they must reevaluate their existing policies, 28 and may be forced to consume precious resources with unnecessary workarounds and duplicative

1 staffing; to unfairly burden nonobjecting employees; to reduce services; and even to close 2 programs. Shafi Decl. ¶¶ 12-15; Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 13-15; Valle Decl. ¶¶ 16-23; Cummings Decl.
3 ¶¶ 15-19; Manley Decl. ¶¶ 10-13; Burkhart Decl. ¶¶ 19-21, 27; Barnes Decl. ¶ 22. Also like the 4 County, providers that specialize in reproductive healthcare and healthcare for LGBT patients could 5 face situations in which a staff member unexpectedly objects to care, leading to staffing issues and 6 inadequate emergency care. But the reproductive and LGBT care providers will be especially 7 affected by the Rule, because more patients who fear refusal of care at traditional healthcare 8 facilities will come to them for care, straining their already limited resources. Shafi Decl. ¶ 20; 9 Cummings Decl. ¶ 15; Shanker Decl. ¶ 13; Barnes Decl. ¶¶ 30-31. And for those providers of last 10 resort, the ability to provide seamless emergency treatment to a patient can mean the difference 11 between life and death. Henn Decl. ¶ 9 (Whitman-Walker staff administered medication to reverse 12 a life-threatening overdose after emergency medical services personnel expressed disapproval of 13 the patient and refused treatment); Carpenter Decl. ¶ 5 (LA LGBT Center provided care to 14 transgender patient after medical conditions became life-threatening because other providers 15 denied care). Those providers also will need to invest resources in educating the community about 16 the Rule and in battling the erosion of community members' confidence in the healthcare system 17 that will result from the Rule's application. Shanker Decl. ¶ 14; Valle Decl. ¶ 16.

18 Finally, the Rule will harm Plaintiff medical associations by frustrating their missions of 19 promoting training in abortion care (Backus Decl. ¶ 11) and nondiscriminatory care for LGBT 20 patients (Vargas Decl. ¶¶ 1-2, 6-8; Harker Decl. ¶¶ 1, 6, 9) throughout the country. The Rule also 21 will harm their members and their members' patients by encouraging denials of care. See Harker 22 Decl. ¶¶ 6, 9; Backus Decl. ¶ 11; Vargas Decl. ¶¶ 6-10.

23 ARGUMENT

24 “The purpose of a preliminary injunction is merely to preserve the relative positions of the 25 parties until a trial on the merits can be held.” Univ. of Texas v. Camenisch, 451 U.S. 390, 395 26 (1981). A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must show “that he is likely to succeed on the 27 merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the 28 balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Regents of the

1 Univ. of Calif. v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Security, 908 F.3d 476, 505 n.20 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting 2 Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008)). In applying this standard, “the 3 elements of the preliminary injunction test are balanced, so that a stronger showing of one element
4 may offset a weaker showing of another.” Pimentel v. Dreyfus, 670 F.3d 1096, 1105 (9th Cir. 2012) 5 (internal quotation marks omitted).

6 Those requirements are met here. Plaintiffs are likely to succeed in proving that the Denial-
7 of-Care Rule is unlawful on several grounds, including that it violates the Administrative Procedure 8 Act (“APA”) because it is arbitrary and capricious, conflicts with existing statutes, and goes far 9 beyond HHS’s statutory authority, and that it is unconstitutional. The irreparable injury is clear:
10 Plaintiffs’ patients will be harmed if the Rule goes into effect, and Plaintiffs themselves will face 11 immediate and substantial burdens to delivering healthcare and fulfilling their missions. At the 12 same time, the government will not be harmed if the Court delays the Rule’s effective date to 13 address the Rule’s many problems. And the public interest plainly favors preventing the Rule from 14 taking immediate effect. Because Plaintiffs are located throughout the country and include 15 nationwide organizations, and the threatened harms will occur nationwide, the Court should issue 16 a nationwide injunction.

17 I. PLAINTIFFS ARE LIKELY TO SUCCEED ON THE MERITS

18 A. Plaintiffs Are Likely To Succeed In Demonstrating that The Rule Violates the 19 APA

20 1. The Rule is Arbitrary and Capricious

21 The APA requires courts to “hold unlawful and set aside” agency actions that are “arbitrary, 22 capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).
23 An agency rule is arbitrary and capricious if the agency has “relied on factors which Congress has 24 not intended it to consider,” “entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem,” or 25 “offered an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency.” Motor 26 Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n of U.S., Inc. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983). An 27 agency must “examine the relevant data and articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action” that 28 includes a “rational connection between the facts found and the choice made.” Id. (internal

1 quotation marks omitted). When an agency has failed to “give adequate reasons for its decisions,” 2 failed to “examine[] the relevant data,” or failed to offer a “rational connection between the facts 3 found and the choice made,” the regulation must be set aside. Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 4 136 S. Ct. 2117, 2125 (2016). Because the failure to satisfy that threshold requirement makes the 5 regulation procedurally defective, the reviewing court need not reach any argument for deference 6 under Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837 (1984). Encino
7 Motorcars, LLC, 136 S. Ct. at 2125.

8 HHS acted arbitrarily and capriciously in promulgating the Denial-of-Care Rule. It adopted 9 a one-sided regulation that is not supported by (and is in fact contrary to) the evidence in the 10 administrative record, and it failed to address important issues raised during the notice-and-11 comment process. These problems are particularly apparent with respect to two issues: harms to 12 patients, and providers’ need to reconcile religious objections with their obligation to provide 13 healthcare.

14 a. Harm to Patients

15 The Rule will harm patients by causing some providers to deny them necessary healthcare 16 and information. HHS knew that. E.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,251. Yet HHS made no effort to quantify 17 the effects of the Rule on patients or to take steps to reduce or avoid those harms.

18 HHS received voluminous comments demonstrating that religious-objection laws have been 19 exploited and misused to delay or deny care, particularly for patients seeking reproductive 20 healthcare and LGBT patients. Many patients already face discrimination and other barriers to care.
21 See, e.g., Cnty. of Santa Clara Cmt. Ltr. 5-6; CRR Cmt. Ltr. 4-5. Healthcare providers have refused 22 to treat LGBT patients and their children, even in emergencies. Cnty. of Santa Clara Cmt. Ltr. 5-6.
23 Many LGBT people and people living with HIV have reported providers refusing to touch them or 24 using excessive precautions, using harsh or abusive language, being physically rough or abusive, 25 or shaming them or blaming them for medical conditions. GLMA Cmt. Ltr. 1-2 (HHS-OCR-2018-26 0002-71703). In a recent study, over one-third of transgender patients reported at least one negative 27 experience related to their gender identity when seeking medical care. Id. at 2.

28 Providers also have denied access to safe pregnancy termination, miscarriage management,

1 and contraception, all of which are necessary to ensure women’s health and well-being. Rape 2 survivors have been denied emergency contraception; pharmacists have refused to provide 3 emergency contraception in time to prevent pregnancy; and hospitals have denied women care to 4 complete miscarriages even when their lives were in danger. CRR Cmt. Ltr. 2-3. If the Rule takes 5 effect, individuals and entities likely will assert religious objections to a much wider variety of care, 6 including reproductive care, transgender care, counseling for same-sex partners, and HIV/AIDS 7 treatment. Lambda Legal Cmt. Ltr. 4-6 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-72186). Those denials of care will 8 disproportionately affect economically disadvantaged patients. See, e.g., CRR Cmt. Ltr. 3-5, 10, 9 25-26. Worse yet, the Rule includes no exceptions for emergencies, so patients will suffer these 10 harms even when they are seeking lifesaving care. Shafi Decl. ¶¶ 14-15; Henn Decl. ¶¶ 6, 9; Valle
11 Decl. ¶ 22.

12 The Rule does not adequately address those concerns. HHS acknowledged that “[d]ifferent 13 types of harm can result from denial of a particular procedure,” including that a “patient’s health 14 might be harmed if an alternative is not readily found, depending on the condition.” 84 Fed. Reg.
15 at 23,251. HHS also recognized that a patient denied care likely will incur additional costs in 16 searching for an alternative, and “the patient may experience distress associated with not receiving 17 a procedure he or she seeks.” Id. And HHS recognized that the Rule would adversely affect “rural 18 communities, underprivileged communities, or other communities that are primarily served by 19 religious healthcare providers or facilities.” Id. at 23,180.

20 HHS had essentially two responses to those acknowledged problems: to hypothesize that 21 more doctors would be available overall (but only to provide certain treatments), and to blame the 22 adverse impacts on the underlying statutes rather than the Rule. First, HHS suggested that the Rule 23 would “increase, not decrease, access to care” by attracting providers who otherwise would not 24 practice medicine because of their religious objections. 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,180. HHS’s only support 25 for this assertion was a small, outdated, and unreliable political poll, id. at 23,181, which 26 acknowledged that it was “not intended to be representative of the entire medical profession” or 27
28

1 even of the membership of the faith-based medical-organizations surveyed.³ HHS cited no data 2 showing that the Rule was needed to keep providers from quitting or that it would attract any new 3 providers to underserved communities. And HHS failed to acknowledge that attracting these new 4 providers would not solve the problem; increasing the number of providers that refuse to provide 5 certain medical treatments does nothing to help patients who need those treatments.

6 Second, HHS wrongly attributed the harmful effects of the Rule to the purportedly
7 authorizing statutes. For example, HHS's response to the concern that refusals will cause patients 8 significant distress is that, in the agency's view, Congress did not want to "establish balancing tests 9 that weigh such emotional distress against the right to abide by one's conscience." 84 Fed. Reg. at 10 23,251. But Congress made no such policy judgment: It established protections for religious 11 objectors but also enacted statutes ensuring that patients would not be harmed. See pp. 3-5, supra.
12 The Rule is what elevates religious objections over the health of patients, and that was a judgment 13 HHS made.

14 HHS ultimately both failed to quantify the harms to patients and failed to give them 15 appropriate weight. HHS decided that it was "appropriate" to finalize the Rule "even though the 16 Department and commenters do not have data capable of quantifying all of its effects on the 17 availability of care." 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,182. HHS also decided that religious refusals were "worth 18 protecting even if they impact overall or individual access to a particular service, such as abortion."
19 Id. That is true even for emergencies: All HHS would say about ensuring emergency care is that it 20 would consider specific scenarios on a case-by-case basis. Id. at 23,176. And HHS did not address 21 whether existing policies that accommodate objections but ensure patient care would be equally 22 effective and less harmful. By failing to account for and give appropriate weight to the many likely 23 harms to patients, and by failing to consider alternatives to lessen or ameliorate those harms, HHS 24 acted arbitrarily and capriciously.

25 b. Providers' Need to Reconcile Religious Objections With Providing 26 Healthcare

27 ³ See "Key Findings on Conscience Rights Polling," Memorandum from Kellyanne Conway to 28 Interested Parties at 4 (April 8, 2009), available at https://docs.wixstatic.com/ugd/809e70_2f66d15b88a0476e96d3b8e3b3374808.pdf. The Rule cites the Memorandum at this URL. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,247 n. 316-318.

1 HHS likewise failed adequately to address how providers can fulfill their missions and 2 provide healthcare while complying with the Rule. The Rule greatly expands the universe of 3 workers who may assert religious objections and the activities to which they may object. And it 4 severely constrains providers' ability to ensure that these objections do not compromise patient
5 care, especially in emergencies. The agency's action will place systematic and significant burdens 6 on covered entities and expose them to incredibly punitive sanctions. HHS was required to justify 7 those burdens and sanctions. See Encino Motorcars, 136 S. Ct. at 2126. It failed to do so.

8 Commenters explained that hospitals and other healthcare organizations already have 9 policies that allow individuals to opt out of certain procedures on religious or moral grounds while 10 ensuring that patients still will receive care. See, e.g., AMA Cmt. Ltr. 5; Cnty. of Santa Clara Cmt.
11 Ltr. 2; S.F. Dep't of Public Health Cmt. Ltr. 2-3 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-69109); Boston Med. Ctr.
12 Cmt. Ltr. 2-3 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-70407); Mass. Med. Soc'y Cmt. Ltr. 1 (HHS-OCR-2018-13 0002-62998). Those policies often require workers to assist in providing emergency care. Sproul 14 Decl. ¶¶ 8, 10; Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 18-19; Burkhart Decl. ¶ 21. Commenters expressed concern that 15 the Rule would call those existing policies into question and would restrict providers' ability to 16 require advance notice of objections and to reassign staff to positions where their objections would 17 not result in harm to patients. E.g., S.F. Cmt. Ltr. 3; N.Y. City Cmt. Ltr. 3 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-18 71028); Am. Nurses Ass'n Cmt. Ltr. 8 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-55870). Commenters also urged 19 HHS not to allow religious objections to take precedence over emergency care. E.g., Boston Med.
20 Ctr. Cmt. Ltr. 6; Nat'l Inst. for Reproductive Health Cmt. Ltr. 13 (HHS-OCR-2018-0002-56426).

21 Rather than craft a rule that addressed and resolved these well-founded concerns, HHS 22 effectively ignored them. HHS acknowledged that providers will have to change their existing 23 policies to provide much greater accommodations for religious objectors. See, e.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 24 23,191. But HHS provided little guidance on which policies would be allowed. For example, the 25 agency did not explain (1) whether providers may require objectors to assist in emergencies, id. at 26 23,183, 23,188; (2) how to proceed when an employee rejects a proposed accommodation, id. at 27 23,263; or (3) what providers may do when workers disclose after hiring that they are unwilling to 28 perform the essential functions of a position, id. The result is that covered entities have inadequate

1 notice of what they can and cannot do to protect patients while accommodating religious objections
 2 under the Rule. HHS acted arbitrarily and capriciously by failing to account for providers’
 3 legitimate concerns and instead leaving those issues to the discretion of individual OCR officials—4 especially when all of the providers’ federal funding is on the line.

5 2. The Rule Conflicts With Existing Healthcare Laws

6 The Rule is “not in accordance with law,” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A), because it conflicts with a 7 number of federal statutes that protect patients’ access to care—especially emergency care—and 8 that prohibit discrimination in the provision of healthcare.

9 a. ACA—Access to Care and Information

10 The ACA expressly prohibits the Secretary of HHS from “promulgating any regulation that” 11 “creates any unreasonable barriers to the ability of individuals to obtain appropriate medical care,” 12 “impedes timely access to health care services,” “interferes with communications regarding a full 13 range of treatment options between the patient and the provider,” “restricts the ability of health care 14 providers to provide full disclosure of all relevant information to patients making health care 15 decisions,” or “violates the principles of informed consent and the ethical standards of health care 16 professionals.” 42 U.S.C. § 18114.

17 The Rule violates each of those provisions. It will prevent individuals from obtaining 18 needed healthcare, especially LGBT patients and patients seeking reproductive care. Phelps Decl.
 19 ¶ 43; McNicholas Decl. ¶ 28; Ettner Decl. ¶¶ 48, 56. It also will prevent patients from obtaining 20 information about certain healthcare procedures and will chill patients, especially LGBT patients, 21 from discussing their healthcare needs. Valle Decl. ¶ 19; Cummings Decl. ¶¶ 9, 14. As a result, 22 those patients will not have the information necessary to provide informed consent. See McNicholas 23 Decl. ¶ 18; 76 Fed. Reg. 9968, 9973 (Feb. 23, 2011) (explaining informed consent). In short, the 24 Rule expressly and wholeheartedly does exactly what Congress prohibited in the ACA.

25 b. EMTALA

26 EMTALA requires hospitals with emergency rooms to provide appropriate care to patients 27 in emergencies. Under EMTALA, hospitals with emergency departments must provide “an 28 appropriate medical screening examination within the capability of the hospital’s emergency

1 department” to determine if a medical emergency exists. 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(a). In a medical 2 emergency, the hospital must either treat the patient “to stabilize the medical condition” or transfer 3 the patient “to another medical facility” for treatment (which for a non-stable patient may be done 4 only with a doctor’s consent). Id. § 1395dd(b), (c)(1).

5 The Denial-of-Care Rule contravenes the clear directive of EMTALA to provide care to 6 patients in distress. The Rule gives expansive protections to religious objectors and does not make 7 exceptions for emergencies. The Rule invites any emergency room employee with a religious 8 objection to decline to provide, or assist in providing, emergency services. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 9 23,176; 83 Fed. Reg. at 3888. Under the Rule, the provider apparently cannot require that individual 10 even to assist with a transfer to another facility where the patient can obtain care. See 84 Fed. Reg.
11 23,186-23,187. And the Rule does not allow hospitals to make the scheduling and staffing decisions 12 necessary to ensure that patients facing emergencies receive treatment, because it severely limits 13 their ability to ask about religious objections and to reassign workers with religious objections to 14 other positions. See pp. 7-8, supra. As a result, under the Rule, providers likely will not be able to 15 fulfill their statutory obligations to examine patients in distress and provide emergency care, or at 16 the very least transfer the patients to hospitals where they can receive the necessary care.

17 c. ACA—Nondiscrimination

18 The ACA prohibits discrimination in the provision of healthcare. Specifically, 42 U.S.C.
19 § 18116 prohibits discrimination against individuals in any health program or activity on grounds 20 prohibited by Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000d et seq.), Title IX of the 21 Education Amendments of 1972 (20 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 22 (42 U.S.C. § 6101 et seq.), or Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. § 794 et 23 seq.). These statutes prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, color, national origin, age, sex, or 24 disability.

25 The Denial-of-Care Rule directly conflicts with that nondiscrimination mandate. A 26 provider’s refusal to treat patients based on religious or moral objections may exclude certain 27 patients from health care programs on grounds prohibited by the ACA. For instance, the Denial-of-28 Care Rule invites individuals to deny transgender individuals healthcare on the basis of sex. See,

1 e.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,178. Such conduct is prohibited under Title IX, as expressly incorporated
2 by the ACA. See Boyden v. Conlin, 341 F. Supp. 3d 979, 1000 (W.D. Wis. 2018); Prestcott v. Rady
3 Children’s Hospital-San Diego, 265 F. Supp. 3d 1090, 1099 (S.D. Cal. 2017). The Rule gives 4 objectors new license to discriminate, rather than enforcing Congress’s prohibitions on 5 discrimination.

6 3. The Rule Goes Beyond HHS’s Statutory Authority

7 An agency may act only within the authority Congress gives it. Bowen v. Georgetown Univ.
8 Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208 (1988). Courts reviewing agency action must “hold unlawful and set 9 aside” actions that exceed the agency’s statutory jurisdiction. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C).

10 The Rule goes well beyond the statutes purportedly authorizing it. Each of those statutes 11 provided a particular protection for religious objectors in a specific context. Those statutes are self-12 executing, and none expressly grants HHS enforcement authority. Nonetheless, HHS decided to 13 assert the authority to enforce those statutes, then attempted to vastly expand their reach. It did so 14 by defining key statutory terms much more broadly than Congress could possibly have intended, 15 and then combining those terms even though Congress kept them separate. Because those 16 definitions and that combination are inconsistent with the statutes that HHS purports to construe, 17 the Rule is unlawful. See Los Angeles Haven Hospice, Inc. v. Sebelius, 638 F.3d 644, 652, 660 (9th 18 Cir. 2011).

19 a. Assist in the Performance

20 HHS’s definition of “assist in the performance” stretches the term to include activities only 21 tangentially related to any healthcare procedure. Only the Church Amendments refer to “assist[ing] 22 in the performance” of an activity, 42 U.S.C. § 300a-7(c)(1), (d), and nothing in that statutory 23 scheme envisions the broad definition in the Rule.

24 Specifically, Congress provided that a healthcare professional is not required to “perform” 25 or “assist in the performance” of “any sterilization procedure or abortion.” 42 U.S.C. § 300a-26 7(c)(1); see 42 U.S.C. § 300a-7(d) (same for individuals who “assist in the performance of” an 27 HHS-funded “health service program or research activity”). “Performance” means “the execution 28 of an action,” and to “assist” means “to give support or aid,” such as when “another surgeon

1 [assisted] on the operation.” Merriam-Webster’s Collegiate Dictionary 70, 863 (10th ed. 1996). By 2 using the terms “perform” and “assist in the performance,” Congress required that the person
3 objecting must have a close and direct nexus to the objected-to activity. The sponsor of the Church 4 Amendments warned against reading the statute more expansively: “There is no intention here to 5 permit a frivolous objection from someone unconnected with the procedure to be the basis for a 6 refusal to perform what would otherwise be a legal operation.” 119 Cong. Rec. S9377, S9597 (Mar.
7 27, 1973).

8 But that is what HHS did. It defined the terms expansively, and it expressly admitted that it 9 was doing so. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,186-23,187. Under HHS’s definition, “assist in the 10 performance” reaches any action with “a specific, reasonable, and articulable connection to 11 furthering” the objected-to procedure, including “counseling, referral, training, or otherwise 12 making arrangements for” a procedure. Id at 23,263, § 88.2. And then HHS expands the Rule’s 13 reach even further by separately defining “referral” to include the provision of virtually any 14 information that may lead to a patient obtaining an objected-to procedure. Id at 23,264, § 88.2 The 15 result is to invite objections by workers whose activities are remote from the actual performance of 16 procedures or medical procedures—such as a receptionist who greets patients or makes 17 appointments, a clerical worker who explains insurance coverage or submits claims, or a security 18 guard who directs patients to particular areas of the hospital. Indeed, HHS was willing to exclude 19 only “irrational assertions” where “there is no actual connection by which the action specifically 20 furthers the procedure.” Id. at 84,187.

21 HHS’s definition of “assist in the performance” goes beyond Congress’s intended meaning 22 of the phrase. And HHS’s inclusion of “counseling” and “referral” in the definition of “assist in the 23 performance” makes that clear. In the underlying statutes, Congress did not include “counseling” 24 and “referral” in “assist[ing] in the performance” of an activity. Instead, Congress separately 25 referred to “counseling” and “referral” as different activities that were independently protected 26 under the statutes. 42 U.S.C. § 300a-7(e) (“counsel”); Pub. L. 115-245, § 507(d)(2), 132 Stat. 2981, 27 3118 (2018) (“refer”); 42 U.S.C. § 238n(a)(1), (a)(2) (“referrals”). That separate treatment is a 28 strong indication that “counseling” and “referral” mean something different from “assist in the 1 performance.”

2 b. Discriminate or Discrimination

3 HHS broadened the Rule’s reach even further through its expansive definition of 4 “discrimination.” The Weldon Amendment, Coats-Snowe Amendment, and Church Amendments
5 prohibit “discrimination” against certain objectors in certain contexts. See Pub. L. 115-245, 6 § 507(d)(2), 132 Stat. 2981, 3118 (2018); 42 U.S.C. § 238n(a)(1), (a)(2); id. § 300a-7(c)(1)-(2), 7 (e). As commonly understood, “discrimination” is “a failure to treat all persons equally when no 8 reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored.” Black’s Law
9 Dictionary (11th ed. 2019). This understanding is well established: The ACA, for example, 10 prohibits “discrimination” in healthcare on the basis of race, color, national origin, age, sex, or 11 disability. 42 U.S.C. § 18116.

12 The Rule goes far beyond what Congress intended by placing unprecedented limits on 13 accommodation policies and preventing healthcare providers from ensuring patient health and 14 safety. Under the Rule, “[d]iscrimination” means any change to the objecting employee’s 15 “position,” “status,” “benefit[s],” or “privilege[s]” in employment, as well as use of any “policies[] 16 or procedures” that subject the objector to “any adverse treatment.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,263, § 88.2.
17 The Rule encompasses almost any negative action towards religious objectors without considering 18 whether that action is legally justifiable. That is true even though federal law recognizes a number 19 of rationales and defenses to justify those actions, including that an employer need not provide an 20 accommodation for an employee’s religious beliefs when the accommodation would cause undue 21 hardship to the employer. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e(j); EEOC v. Abercrombie & Fitch Stores, Inc., 22 135 S. Ct. 2028, 2032 (2015); Peterson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 358 F.3d 599, 607 (9th Cir. 2004).

23 Under the Rule, a healthcare entity could be deemed to have engaged in unlawful 24 discrimination simply by taking measures that are reasonably necessary to find out about religious 25 objections and ensure that those objections do not compromise patient care. Only actions falling 26 within the definition’s narrow and restrictive exceptions are excluded. See pp. 7-8, supra. Thus, 27 under the Rule’s broad definition of “assist in the performance,” a worker might object to providing 28 certain information to patients, and might even object to directing patients to someone else who

1 could help them, and under the Rule’s broad definition of “discrimination,” the entity employing 2 that worker would be unable to reassign the worker, thereby putting patients at risk.

3 Congress plainly did not intend its prohibition on “discrimination” to require healthcare 4 entities to put the needs of religious objectors above the needs of all others. And Congress 5 recognized, in the ACA and EMTALA, that providers have obligations to provide healthcare and 6 information, especially in emergency circumstances. To meet those obligations, providers must be 7 able to adopt policies that ensure that patients will receive care even when an employee raises a 8 religious objection. Yet, in its definition of “discrimination,” HHS declined to consider the 9 legitimate needs of healthcare providers. And by elevating religious objections over the needs of 10 patients, HHS enables new and unjustified forms of discrimination—turning Congress’s mandate 11 not to “discriminate” on its head.

12 B. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Succeed On Their Establishment Clause Claim

13 The Establishment Clause provides essential protections for religious freedom. It bars 14 official conduct that favors one faith over others, has the primary purpose or primary effect of 15 advancing or endorsing religion, or coerces religious belief or practice. See, e.g., McCreary Cnty.
16 v. ACLU of Ky., 545 U.S. 844, 860 (2005); Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 302
17 (2000); Cnty. House, Inc. v. City of Boise, 490 F.3d 1041, 1054 (9th Cir. 2007).

18 The Denial-of-Care Rule violates those constitutional guarantees. It officially prefers the 19 religious beliefs of objectors over the rights and beliefs of providers and patients, and it coerces 20 religious exercise by requiring providers and patients to act in accordance with objecting 21 employees’ religious beliefs. The Rule’s favoritism toward religious beliefs invoked by objecting 22 employees is subject to strict scrutiny. See Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 246 (1982). The Rule 23 cannot survive strict scrutiny because, among other reasons, there are obvious less-restrictive 24 alternatives for accommodating objecting employees, including providers’ existing policies.

25 1. The Rule Impermissibly Imposes the Costs and Burdens of Objecting 26 Employees’ Religious Beliefs on Patients and Other Third Parties

27 The Establishment Clause flatly prohibits religious exemptions or accommodations by 28 government that would have a “detrimental effect on any third party.” Burwell v. Hobby Lobby

1 Stores, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 2751, 2781 n.37 (2014); see Cutter v. Wilkerson, 544 U.S. 709, 720 (2005).
2 That is because religious exemptions that burden third parties impermissibly prefer the religion of 3 those who are benefited over the beliefs and interests of those who are not. See, e.g., Texas Monthly, 4 Inc. v. Bullock, 489 U.S. 1, 15 (1989) (plurality opinion). The Denial-of-Care Rule violates the 5 Establishment Clause because it imposes costs, burdens, and harms on healthcare providers and 6 patients for the purpose of facilitating the religious beliefs and practices of objecting employees.

7 The prohibition against harming third parties is longstanding and well settled. In Sherbert
8 v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398 (1963), for example, the Supreme Court permitted a religious 9 accommodation under a state unemployment-benefits law for an employee who was fired for 10 refusing to work on her Sabbath because the requested accommodation would not “abridge any 11 other person’s religious liberties.” Id. at 409. In Estate of Thornton v. Caldor, 472 U.S. 703 (1985), 12 by contrast, the Court invalidated a state law requiring employers to accommodate people observing 13 the Sabbath in all instances because “the statute t[ook] no account of the convenience or interests 14 of the employer or those of other employees who do not observe a Sabbath.” Id. at 709; see Texas 15 Monthly, 489 U.S. at 15, 18 n.8 (plurality opinion) (invalidating tax exemption for religious 16 periodicals because it increased taxes on nonbeneficiaries). Accordingly, in evaluating 17 Establishment Clause challenges, courts must “account [for] the burdens a requested 18 accommodation may impose on nonbeneficiaries” and ensure that the accommodation does not 19 “override other significant interests.” Cutter, 544 U.S. at 720, 722.

20 Plaintiffs and other healthcare providers have developed policies and procedures to ensure 21 that they can deliver care to their patients efficiently and fairly while respecting employees’ 22 religious beliefs. The Rule undermines essential patient protections by inviting employees, 23 contractors, and volunteers of a healthcare institution to deny care to patients based on religious 24 objections either to the treatment or to the characteristics or circumstances of the patient, without 25 regard to the burdens and harms they will impose on patients and providers. See Burkhart Decl.
26 ¶¶ 13-16; Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 20-23; Vargas Decl. ¶ 13; Sproul Decl. ¶¶ 11-12.

27 For example, the County of Santa Clara’s hospitals allow their employees to opt out of 28 participating in certain procedures when they have religious objections, so long as they provide

1 notice adequate to allow the hospital to arrange appropriate alternative staffing. See Lorenz Decl.
2 ¶¶ 11-13; Tullys Decl. ¶ 11; Sproul Decl. ¶¶ 8-9. But the Rule limits the hospitals’ ability to require 3 advance notice of objections, because hospitals can ask about objections only “after . . . hiring” and 4 “once per calendar year” thereafter. 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,263. The Rule also limits the hospitals’ 5 ability to make staffing adjustments by permitting only voluntary accommodations for objecting 6 employees. Id. at 23,263. Thus, the County could not reassign an employee who objects to 7 performing core functions of his or her job but refuses to accept a transfer. The County’s policies
8 also require all staff members to assist in emergencies, Sproul Decl. ¶¶ 8, 10; Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 18-9 19, but the Rule contains no exceptions for emergencies, 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,176.

10 If the County retains its existing policies to ensure continuity of patient care, it could be 11 deprived of all Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements and other federal funding, thus 12 compromising its ability to serve the neediest patients. If the County attempts to comply with the 13 Rule while still ensuring patient care, it could be forced to use double-staffing and other 14 prohibitively expensive measures. Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 18-19. Either way, the Rule will severely burden 15 the County and its patients. Id. ¶¶ 11-13, 22-24.

16 Further, the Rule threatens the very existence of many healthcare facilities whose 17 institutional mission, core functions, or small size do not allow them to operate if an employee 18 denies assistance to patients, refuses to assist in a referral, or refuses reassignment to another job.
19 Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 15-16; Burkhardt Decl. ¶¶ 22-24; Vargas Decl. ¶ 10; Shafi Decl. ¶ 8. That is 20 particularly true for entities that provide abortion and other reproductive-health services or 21 transition-related care or other services to LGBT patients. Lorenz Decl. ¶¶ 15-16; Burkhardt Decl.
22 ¶¶ 22-24; Vargas Decl. ¶ 10; Shafi Decl. ¶ 8. In short, although the Establishment Clause flatly 23 prohibits the government from mandating that “religious concerns automatically control over all 24 secular interests,” Caldor, 472 U.S. at 709, that is what the Denial-of-Care Rule does.

25 2. The Rule Impermissibly Coerces Patients and Healthcare Providers to 26 Adhere to the Government’s Favored Religious Practices

27 “[T]he Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or 28 participate in religion or its exercise.” Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 587 (1992); see Santa Fe,

1 530 U.S. at 312. “For the government to coerce someone to participate in religious activities strikes 2 at the core of the Establishment Clause.” Inouye v. Kemna, 504 F.3d 705, 712 (9th Cir. 2007). But 3 the Denial-of-Care Rule does just that: It uses the government’s authority to coerce Plaintiffs and 4 their patients to act in accordance with the religious beliefs and practices of objecting employees.

5 The Rule emboldens individual employees to dictate whether and how patients receive 6 healthcare based on their own personal religious views. That is true even when those beliefs are 7 expressly contrary to the religious or other mission of a healthcare institution or the patient’s own 8 beliefs. Women who seek reproductive healthcare at a clinic that provides family-planning services
9 may have that care denied based on the religious views of a single employee. Barnes Decl. ¶¶ 29-10 30. LGBT patients may be pressured to conform to religious views on gender expression and sexual 11 orientation that an objecting employee holds, lest they be denied care. See Tullys Decl. ¶ 13; 12 Pumphrey Decl. ¶¶ 6-7; Cummings Decl. ¶ 14. And the Rule invites individual employees to refuse 13 to provide patients with complete medical information and instead to give skewed advice based on 14 their own religious beliefs rather than medical protocols. Henn Decl. ¶ 6.

15 C. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Succeed on Their Equal Protection Claim

16 By targeting transgender patients’ transition-related healthcare needs for religious and 17 moral objection, the Rule discriminates based on sex, gender identity, and transgender status. It 18 therefore is subject to strict scrutiny (for discrimination based on transgender status), or at least 19 heightened scrutiny (for discrimination based on sex). The Rule fails any level of review, because 20 it is not even rationally related to any legitimate governmental interest, let alone adequately tailored 21 to further an exceedingly persuasive or compelling one.

22 Discrimination against transgender people is discrimination based on sex for several 23 reasons. Norsworthy v. Beard, 87 F. Supp. 3d 1104, 1119 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (denial of treatment for 24 gender dysphoria constitutes sex discrimination). First, a person’s gender identity is a sex-related 25 characteristic. Fabian v. Hosp. of Cent. Conn., 172 F. Supp. 3d 509, 527 (D. Conn. 2016). Second, 26 discriminating based on a person’s gender transition is discrimination based on sex, just as firing 27 an employee because she converts from Christianity to Judaism “would be a clear case of 28 discrimination ‘because of religion.’” Schroer v. Billington, 577 F. Supp. 2d 293, 306 (D.D.C.

1 2008). Third, discrimination against transgender people is rooted in sex stereotypes, because a 2 transgender person’s “inward identity [does] not meet social definitions of masculinity [or 3 femininity]” associated with one’s assigned sex at birth. Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1201
4 (9th Cir. 2000); see Whitaker v. Kenosha Unified Sch. Dist., 858 F.3d 1034, 1051 (7th Cir. 2017); 5 Evancho v. Pine-Richland Sch. Dist., 237 F. Supp. 3d 267, 285-86 (W.D. Pa. 2017).

6 Separately, discrimination based on transgender status is a suspect classification. See 7 Norsworthy, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1119. Indeed, strict scrutiny is warranted when the government 8 targets a class that (1) has been “historically subjected to discrimination,” (2) has a defining 9 characteristic bearing no “relation to ability to perform or contribute to society,” (3) has “obvious, 10 immutable, or distinguishing characteristics,” and (4) is “a minority or politically powerless.”
11 Windsor v. United States, 699 F.3d 169, 181 (2d Cir. 2012), aff’d on other grounds, 570 U.S. 744 12 (2013) (internal quotation marks omitted). Although the first two considerations alone can be 13 dispositive, see Golinski v. U.S. Office of Pers. Mgmt., 824 F. Supp. 2d 968, 983 (N.D. Cal. 2012), 14 all of them are present in the government’s discrimination based on transgender status and so strict 15 scrutiny applies, see, e.g., Karnoski v. Trump, 2018 WL 1784464 *9-*10 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 13, 16 2018); F.V. v. Barron, 286 F. Supp. 3d 1131, 1144 (D. Idaho. 2018).

17 Under heightened scrutiny, a challenged classification is presumptively unconstitutional, 18 and the government bears the burden of demonstrating that the classification bears a substantial 19 relationship to important government interests. U.S. v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515, 533 (1996) (“VMI”).
20 Under strict scrutiny, the government action must be narrowly tailored to serve compelling 21 interests. City of Cleburne, Tex. v. Cleburne Living Ctr., 473 U.S. 432, 440 (1985). Under either 22 standard, the government must account for the harms it causes, including the dignitary harm that 23 results from imposition of a second-class status. SmithKline Beecham v. Abbott Labs., 740 F.3d 24 471, 482 (9th Cir. 2014).

25 The Rule is not even rationally related to HHS’s asserted interests in “removing unlawful 26 barriers to careers in the health field” and “ensuring the implementation and enforcement of existing 27 laws.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 3916. On the contrary, the Rule arbitrarily elevates religious objections over 28 the health and well-being of patients, contrary to federal law and the operational needs of healthcare

1 providers. Giving a preference for certain religious beliefs (particularly about reproductive care and 2 gender dysphoria) over the needs of patients is not a legitimate government purpose. McCreary
3 Cnty., 545 U.S. at 859-60.

4 Although the Rule speculates about the possibility that an increased number of healthcare 5 providers will enter the field if they are permitted to deny certain types of care, 84 Fed. Reg. at 6 23,247, 23,250, HHS admits that it lacks data to support (and the record does not support) that 7 assertion. See VMI, 518 U.S. at 533 (hypothesized justifications inadequate under heightened 8 scrutiny). And even if those additional providers entered the field, it would not solve the problem 9 of discriminatory denials of care, because the new providers would be those who want to deny 10 reproductive or transition-related care. HHS acknowledges that some patients (such as LGBT 11 patients and those seeking reproductive care) will be disadvantaged, but concludes that the 12 hypothetical benefits of the Rule to other people justify the Rule. 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,251-23,252.
13 That is a government decision to benefit certain patients at the expense of others, and it is 14 impermissible. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 633 (1996) (a preference for one group of people 15 over another is a “denial of equal protection in the most literal sense”). The government may not 16 give effect to “private bias.” Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 433 (1984). When “sincere, personal 17 opposition becomes enacted law and public policy, the necessary consequence is to put the 18 imprimatur of the [government] itself on an exclusion that soon demeans or stigmatizes those whose 19 own liberty is then denied.” Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2602 (2015).

20 The Rule’s wide-ranging, harmful effects easily could be avoided with a rule that respects 21 religious objections while ensuring patient health, consistent with the existing policies of Plaintiffs 22 and other healthcare organizations. The Rule’s illegitimate purpose and poor tailoring, and the 23 existence of obvious less restrictive alternatives, doom the Rule under the Equal Protection Clause.

24 D. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Succeed On Their Due Process Claim

25 The Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause protects the right to make intimate decisions 26 concerning procreation, family life, marriage, bodily integrity, and self-definition because such 27 decisions are core to each person’s identity, central to an individual’s dignity and autonomy, and 28 “shape an individual’s destiny.” Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2593, 2597, 2599; see Planned

1 Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 574 (2003). The Rule 2 violates this guarantee by unduly burdening patients’ access to abortion; impermissibly interfering 3 with their access to contraception; and impermissibly interfering with transgender and gender non-4 conforming patients’ medical autonomy, bodily integrity, and ability to live in accordance with 5 their gender identity.

6 1. Abortion

7 The Supreme Court has repeatedly affirmed a woman’s right to “retain the ultimate control 8 over her destiny and her body.” Casey, 505 U.S. at 869. The government “may not prohibit any 9 woman from making the ultimate decision to terminate her pregnancy” before viability. Gonzales 10 v. Carhart, 550 U.S. 124, 146 (2007) (quoting Casey, 505 U.S. at 879). It also may not impose an 11 undue burden on the right to abortion. Id. Thus, a law is unconstitutional if its “purpose or effect” 12 is to “place a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus 13 attains viability.” Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2299 (2016) (quoting 14 Casey, 505 U.S. at 878). When analyzing restrictions on access to abortion, the Court has made 15 clear that where a law’s burdens exceed its benefits, those burdens are by definition undue, and the 16 obstacles they embody are by definition substantial. Id. at 2300, 2309-10, 2312, 2318. The undue 17 burden standard does not permit restrictions that hinder access to abortion. Casey, 505 U.S. at 877.

18 The Rule violates these principles. First, it empowers a broad class of healthcare employees 19 to impede a pregnant person’s exercise of the right to abortion prior to viability. Casey, 505 U.S. at 20 894-96. The Constitution prohibits unjustified state interference with abortion, even when the 21 government invokes the rights of others to attempt to justify that interference. Id. at 894-96 22 (invalidating spousal-notification provision that would enable a husband to prevent his wife from 23 obtaining an abortion; husband’s interest did not permit the State to empower him with such 24 “troubling degree of authority over his wife”). Rather than informing a woman’s choice, the Rule 25 coerces that choice by empowering third parties, including those with only a tangential connection 26 to the procedure, to delay and even ultimately control a woman’s decision. Permitting their views 27 to override those of a pregnant person “hinder[s]” access to abortion in precisely the manner 28 foreclosed by the Supreme Court. Id. at 877, 894-96.

1 Further, the Rule will deter pregnant persons from seeking abortion care, based on stigma,
2 fear of judgment, fear of discrimination, and fear of receiving compromised care. See McNicholas 3 Decl. ¶¶ 27-28. Stigma around abortion fosters fear and psychological stress in women seeking 4 care. See id. ¶ 28; Barnes Decl. ¶ 30. And empowering a third party to effectively veto a pregnant 5 person’s abortion violates their right to make “choices central to personal dignity and autonomy.”
6 Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 574; see also Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2602; Casey, 505 U.S. at 851. These 7 deterrents will prevent pregnant people from seeking abortion “as surely as if the [government] had 8 outlawed abortion in all cases.” Casey, 505 U.S. at 894.

9 Finally, the Denial-of-Care Rule will artificially limit the number of abortion providers
10 across the United States. There already is a national shortage of abortion providers due to hospital 11 mergers and laws restricting access to abortion in states throughout the country. McNicholas Decl.
12 ¶ 19. The significant reduction in providers that likely will result from the Rule will delay and 13 prevent women’s access to care, compounding the logistical and financial burdens patients face and 14 increasing their risk of injury and death. Id. ¶¶ 26-30.

15 Whether the Rule forces providers to self-regulate by altering their policies to permit the 16 denial of care to patients, to cease providing abortion services altogether, or to face the loss of all 17 federal funding, it coerces the decision to have an abortion and places an undue burden on the right 18 to abortion in violation of the Due Process Clause.

19 2. Contraception

20 The Constitution also protects an individual’s right to reproductive autonomy, including the 21 use of contraception. The Supreme Court first recognized a constitutional right to make certain 22 personal, intimate choices about whether and when to have children over fifty years ago. Griswold 23 v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965). Since then, the Court has repeatedly reaffirmed that “the 24 Constitution protects individual decisions in matters of childbearing from unjustified intrusion by 25 the State.” Carey v. Population Servs. Int’l, 431 U.S. 678, 687 (1977); see Casey, 505 U.S. at 852-26 53; Eisenstadt, 405 U.S. at 453.

27 Strict scrutiny applies to government actions that limit access to contraception. Access to 28 contraception is a core aspect of bodily integrity, personal decision-making, and marital, familial,

1 and sexual privacy. Casey, 505 U.S. at 856. And the Supreme Court has not hesitated to strike down
2 unjustified restrictions on access to contraception. For example, the Court invalidated a state statute 3 that did not ban contraception directly but limited distribution of contraceptives to licensed 4 pharmacists, explaining that it “clearly impose[d] a significant burden on the right of the individuals 5 to use contraceptives” by decreasing access, price competition, and privacy in selection and 6 purchase. Carey, 431 U.S. at 689. The Court recognized that the right to make decisions about 7 contraception is fundamental, applied strict scrutiny, and concluded that the statute served no 8 compelling state interest and bore no relation to the State’s interest in protecting health. Id. at 685, 9 690-91.

10 The Denial-of-Care Rule fails strict scrutiny. The Rule lacks even a rational relationship to 11 a legitimate government interest, let alone the required narrow tailoring to serve a compelling 12 government interest. As explained (pp. 9-12, 14-16, supra), the Rule does not serve HHS’s asserted 13 purposes of encouraging health care providers to enter the field or implementing and enforcing 14 existing laws, and it will cause numerous countervailing harms. The Rule will reduce access to 15 contraception and remove from women and LGBT patients the most effective means by which to 16 prevent unintended pregnancy, coercing them into unwanted pregnancies, imposing numerous 17 health risks, and severely diminishing the fundamental right to reproductive decision-making.
18 McNicholas Decl. ¶ 24; Phelps Decl. ¶ 34. This interferes with their ability to participate fully in 19 the “marketplace and the world of ideas,” Mississippi Univ. for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718, 20 726 n.11 (1982), and drastically compromises their ability to make “choices central to personal 21 dignity and autonomy,” Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 574; see Casey, 431 U.S. at 690-91.

22 3. Gender-Affirming Care

23 The Denial-of-Care Rule invites healthcare providers to deprive transgender and gender 24 non-conforming patients of medically necessary and often life-saving care, including treatment for 25 gender dysphoria, thereby impermissibly burdening their medical autonomy, bodily integrity, 26 dignity, and ability to live in accord with their gender identity. Gender is fundamental to a person’s 27 identity; it is the internalized, inherent sense of who a person is (e.g., male, female, or non-binary).
28 Ettner Decl. ¶ 14; Valle Decl. ¶ 13. This is as true for a transgender person as for a non-transgender

1 person. Ettner Decl. ¶ 14. A person’s gender identity is so fundamental that they cannot be required
2 to abandon it. Id. ¶ 15; Hernandez-Montiel v. INS, 225 F.3d 1084, 1093 (9th Cir. 2000), overruled
3 on other grounds by Thomas v. Gonzales, 409 F.3d 1177, 1187 (9th Cir. 2005).

4 Each person has a fundamental right to live and express oneself in a manner consistent with 5 their gender identity, because doing so is a core aspect of individual self-definition, dignity, and 6 autonomy. See Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 562 (“Liberty presumes an autonomy of self that includes 7 freedom of thought, belief, expression, and certain intimate conduct.”). The substantive protections 8 of the Due Process Clause protect the right of all people to possess and control their own person, 9 and to “define and express their identity.” Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2593. This includes the right to 10 live in accord with one’s gender identity. Karnoski, 2017 WL 6311305, at *8 (plaintiffs likely to 11 succeed in demonstrating that ban on transgender military service violates fundamental right of 12 service members to live and express themselves in accordance with their gender identities)
13 (injunction stayed by Supreme Court pending appeal); Arroyo Gonzalez v. Rossello Nevares, 305 14 F. Supp. 3d 327, 334 (D.P.R. 2018) (policy depriving transgender people of accurate identity 15 documents infringed due process right to self-determination). And it includes the right to make 16 medical decisions for oneself and to medical autonomy. Coons v. Lew, 762 F.3d 891, 899 (9th Cir.
17 2014).

18 The Rule infringes this protected autonomy and self-determination by inviting healthcare 19 workers and entities to deny transgender patients access to medically necessary healthcare. For 20 transgender and gender-nonconforming patients, the “only real path,” Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 21 2594, to the full recognition and expression of their true selves, and to be able to participate in 22 public life with dignity, consists of the ability to access gender-affirming medical care, including 23 surgical procedures, hormone therapy, and other medically necessary care. The ability to live in 24 accord with and express one’s gender identity is “so fundamentally important . . . that the 25 government may not, absent satisfying a heightened level of scrutiny, infringe or burden an 26 individual’s autonomy or freedom to make [such a] decision.” Scott Skinner-Thompson, Outing 27 Privacy, 110 Nw. U. L. Rev. 159, 171-72 (2015). The Rule severely burdens transgender and 28 gender-nonconforming patients, while not rationally serving even any legitimate governmental

1 interest, let alone the compelling one required. It therefore violates due process.

2 E. Plaintiffs Are Likely to Succeed On Their Free Speech Claim

3 The Denial-of-Care Rule impermissibly chills LGBT patients who seek medical care from 4 being open about their gender identity or transgender status and from expressing themselves in a 5 manner consistent with their gender identities. Courts long have held that disclosing one’s gender 6 identity or sexual orientation—sometimes referred to as “coming out”—is protected First 7 Amendment expression. See Karnoski, 2017 WL 6311305, at *9 (disclosure of gender identity and 8 transgender status protected); Log Cabin Republicans v. United States, 716 F. Supp. 2d 884, 926 9 (C.D. Cal. 2010) (military’s “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” policy was a content-based speech restriction 10 because “[h]eterosexual members are free to state their sexual orientation . . . while gay and lesbian 11 members of the military are not”), vacated as moot, 658 F.3d 1162 (9th Cir. 2011); see Gay Students
12 Org. of Univ. of N.H. v. Bonner, 509 F.2d 652, 659-61 (1st Cir. 1974); Henkle v. Gregory, 150 F.
13 Supp. 2d 1067, 1075-77 (D. Nev. 2001); Weaver v. Nebo Sch. Dist., 29 F. Supp. 2d 1279, 1284-85
14 (D. Utah 1998); Fricke v. Lynch, 491 F. Supp. 381, 385 (D.R.I. 1980). An individual’s definition 15 and expression of their gender identity through their appearance also is protected expression. See 16 Doe ex rel. Doe v. Yunits, 2000 WL 33162199, at *3 (Mass. Super. Oct. 11, 2000), aff’d sub nom, 17 Doe v. Brockton Sch. Comm., 2000 WL 33342399 (Mass. App. Ct. Nov. 30, 2000).

18 The Rule impermissibly burdens this protected speech and expression. A regulation “may 19 burden speech” even if it “stops short of prohibiting it.” Doe v. Harris, 772 F.3d 563, 572 (9th Cir.
20 2014). Here, the Rule will have the “inevitable effect of burdening,” id. at 574, LGBT patients’ 21 disclosure of their transgender status or their gender-nonconforming expression because they will 22 fear denial of healthcare if they do make such disclosure, see Mendocino Env’tl. Ctr. v. Mendocino
23 Cnty., 192 F.3d 1283, 1300 (9th Cir. 1999) (government action violates First Amendment if it 24 would cause a person of “ordinary firmness” to self-censor). It does not matter that this chilling 25 depends both on governmental and non-governmental actors (the objecting employees), because 26 the government “may not induce, encourage or promote private persons to accomplish what it is 27 constitutionally forbidden to accomplish.” Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U.S. 455, 463, 465 (1973).
28 The Rule also denies the benefit of federal healthcare funds to transgender and gender

1 nonconforming people based on their protected expression. Doing so also penalizes and inhibits
2 the exercise of that fundamental freedom. Riley v. Nat'l Fed'n of the Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S.
3 781, 794 (1988); Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 597 (1972). And the Rule is overbroad 4 because it impermissibly chills and burdens the exercise of a substantial amount of patients' 5 constitutionally protected speech and expression, beyond any legitimate sweep of the underlying 6 statutes. See United States v. Sineneng-Smith, 910 F.3d 461, 470 (9th Cir. 2018).

7 The Rule burdens speech based on its content and viewpoint, because it attaches different 8 consequences to the same speech depending on the identity of the speaker. See Police Dep't of 9 Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 96 (1972). For example, the Rule facilitates denial of treatment to 10 a transgender woman who discloses her gender identity or checks the box marked "female" at her 11 endocrinologist's office, but not to a non-transgender woman who discloses that she identifies as 12 cisgender and female. The government may not burden speech "because of disapproval of the ideas 13 expressed." R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, Minn., 505 U.S. 377, 382 (1992) (citations omitted). Content-14 based regulation is subject to "the most exacting scrutiny," Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 412 15 (1989) (citation omitted), and "[v]iewpoint discrimination is . . . an egregious form of content 16 discrimination," Rosenberger v. Rector & Visitors of Univ. of Va., 515 U.S. 819, 829 (1995).

17 The Rule cannot satisfy that rigorous First Amendment scrutiny because it lacks sufficient 18 justification for the many harms it will cause. The Rule will harm patients by coercing them to stay 19 in the closet, to self-censor about their medical histories and needs, and to refrain from engaging in 20 gendered expression. Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 11-12; Vargas Decl. ¶ 14; Henn Decl. ¶ 5; Bolan Decl. ¶¶ 8-21 10; Carpenter Decl. ¶ 11; Manley Decl. ¶ 8; Harker Decl. ¶ 14. Remaining closeted from a 22 healthcare provider can result in significant adverse health consequences, not just to an individual 23 patient, but to public health. See Bolan Decl. ¶¶ 10-11 (patient who conceals same-sex sexual 24 history may not be screened for HIV or other infections or cancers, or prescribed medications 25 effective at preventing HIV transmission; transgender patients who do not disclose their 26 transgender status may not be given necessary tests and screenings, such as for testicular or prostate 27 cancer for transgender women); Carpenter Decl. ¶ 5 (patient who did not disclose same-sex sexual 28

1 history to provider was not given appropriate testing and passed his infection to five other people 2 before appropriate diagnosis).

3 Many LGBT patients already fear healthcare providers because of past experiences of anti-4 LGBT bias after disclosing their sexual orientation or gender identity, and a significant number are 5 not “out” to one or more of their healthcare providers. Shanker Decl. ¶¶ 10-11; Henn Decl. ¶ 3; see 6 Ettner Decl. ¶ 55. The Rule will erode trust further between patients and providers, resulting in 7 worse patient outcomes. Carpenter Decl. ¶¶ 8-9; Henn Decl. ¶ 5; see Conant v. Walters, 309 F.3d 8 629, 636-37 (9th Cir. 2002) (recognizing, in a First Amendment challenge, that “barriers to full 9 disclosure would impair diagnosis and treatment”). There is no justification for those harms, and 10 there is a readily available, workable alternative—the policies put in place under the narrow statutes 11 that Congress enacted to protect religious objectors. Because the Rule goes well beyond those 12 statutes, burdening constitutionally protected speech for no good reason, it violates the First 13 Amendment.

14 F. The County Is Likely to Succeed on Its Separation-of-Powers and Spending 15 Clause Claims

16 In promulgating the Rule, HHS has usurped congressional authority to impose conditions 17 on federal spending and imposed conditions that transgress the bounds of even Congress’ spending 18 power.⁴

19 Since the Nation’s founding, the power of the purse has been allocated to Congress, the 20 branch of the federal government more directly answerable to the people. See U.S. Const. art. I, 21 § 8, cl. 1; see City & Cnty. of S.F. v. Trump, 897 F.3d 1225, 1231 (9th Cir. 2018). Congress may 22 give Executive Branch agencies some discretion in deciding how to use appropriated funds, but 23 that discretion necessarily is cabined by the scope of the delegation. City of Arlington, Tex. v.
24 F.C.C., 569 U.S. 290, 297-98 (2013). Further, agencies may not use appropriated funds in a way 25 that effectively alters the terms of the anchoring statutes, which Congress has “finely wrought and 26 exhaustively considered” via the legislative process. Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417,

27 ⁴ The County joins in the Spending Clause and separation-of-powers arguments advanced in the 28 motions for preliminary injunctive relief submitted by the State of California and City and County of San Francisco. See State of California v. Azar, No. 4:19-cv-02769-HSG (N.D. Cal.), Doc. No.
11; City and County of San Francisco v. Azar, No. 4:19-cv-2405-JCS (N.D. Cal.), Doc. No. 14.

1 439-40 (1998). As explained (pp. 20-23, supra), the Rule radically departs from federal religious-2 objector statutes, falling well outside the authority Congress has delegated.

3 Indeed, the Rule is so coercive and unfair that even Congress would lack authority to impose 4 the same conditions by statute. The Rule places States and localities like the County at risk of 5 potentially ruinous sanctions, based on unanticipated, after-the-fact, and confusing requirements.
6 See Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519, 581-84 (2012) (conditioning continued
7 receipt of Medicaid funding on after-the-fact conditions exceeded Congress's Spending Clause
8 powers); Pennhurst State School and Hosp. v. Halderman, 451 U.S. 1, 17 (1981) (if Congress
9 wishes to condition the States' receipt of federal funds it "must do so unambiguously"). And it 10 threatens funding of critical local functions—including those supporting many of the County's most 11 vulnerable populations, protecting the health and safety of children and individuals with disabilities, 12 and ensuring disaster preparedness—to advance concerns unrelated to the federal interest in the 13 particular programs being funded. See Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus., 567 U.S. at 580; see also South
14 Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203, 207-08 (1987).

15 HHS lacks authority to so forcibly unravel local public policy choices. The County is 16 responsible under California law for providing medical care for indigent patients, preventing the 17 transmission of communicable disease, and protecting the health and safety of its residents. Cal.
18 Const. art. XI, § 7; Cal. Welf. & Inst. Code § 17000 et seq.; Cal. Health & Saf. Code §§ 10100 and 19 120100 et seq. Its hospitals, pharmacies, clinics, and public health department rely on roughly a 20 billion dollars in federal funding for their continued existence and operation. Lorenz Decl. ¶ 22. In 21 mandating that the County allow its staff to turn patients away based on religious objections to the 22 care sought, to refuse to help during an emergency based on such objections, or otherwise to 23 stigmatize and harm patients, the Rule is fundamentally inconsistent with the County's own policy 24 choices and flatly interferes with its exercise of local, public-health functions. It was precisely to 25 protect such policy choices about matters of local concern that the Framers reserved to the States 26 and their political subdivisions all powers not expressly enumerated in the Constitution. See United 27 States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 617-19 (2000); Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 U.S. 470, 485 (1996); 28 Hillsborough Cnty., Fla. v. Automated Med. Labs., Inc., 471 U.S. 707, 719 (1985).

1 II. IF PERMITTED TO TAKE EFFECT, THE RULE WILL IRREPARABLY HARM
2 PLAINTIFFS, THEIR MEMBERS, AND THEIR PATIENTS

3 Because of the Rule, Plaintiffs' patients will almost certainly experience delays in obtaining 4 medical care or be denied care altogether, leading them to incur increased costs and suffer worse 5 health outcomes. The Rule will compromise Plaintiffs' ability to fulfill their core functions and 6 ensure adequate patient care, and will require them to incur unrecoverable administrative costs to 7 attempt to comply with the Rule. The Rule also will violate the constitutional rights of Plaintiffs 8 and their patients. This Court should issue a preliminary injunction to prevent these irreparable 9 harms while it considers Plaintiffs' challenge to the Rule.

10 A. The Rule Will Severely Harm Plaintiffs' Patients

11 As a result of the Rule, Plaintiffs' patients will encounter new obstacles to obtaining medical 12 care. They will face increased risks that they will be denied care or information because a healthcare 13 worker whom they encounter objects to certain procedures. They will find it more difficult to obtain 14 certain services because the Rule will deter healthcare facilities from offering those services. And 15 some of them will not be able to obtain medically necessary healthcare.

16 The delay or denial of healthcare, particularly in emergency situations, is likely to cause 17 patients pain, complications, injury, or even death—all irreparable harms. See Harris v. Bd. of 18 Supervisors, Los Angeles Cnty., 366 F.3d 754, 762 (9th Cir. 2004). Patients seeking contraceptive 19 care may suffer substantial consequences such as an unintended pregnancy if their care is delayed.
20 McNicholas Decl. ¶ 41; see Pennsylvania v. Trump, 351 F. Supp. 3d 791, 828 (E.D. Pa. 2019). And 21 patients who are not informed of all information and options regarding their care will have their 22 rights to informed consent stripped away. Nguyen Decl. ¶ 9; McNicholas Decl. ¶ 18.

23 Patients denied care will also face irreparable dignitary and emotional harms. That is 24 particularly true for transgender patients denied transition-related care because an employee objects 25 to their very identity, and for reproductive healthcare patients denied the ability to make choices 26 central to defining their life's course. Lorenz Decl. ¶ 16; Sproul Decl. ¶ 13; Burkhart Decl. ¶ 22;
27 McNicholas Decl. ¶ 43; Pumphrey Decl. ¶ 8; Ettner Decl. ¶¶ 48, 56; see Whitaker, 858 F.3d at 1045 28 (describing harm to transgender boy as a result of being denied access to school's restroom for boys). Patients who anticipate that they may be refused care under the Rule will be deterred from

1 seeking care or providing information important to their care, fearing hostility and stigma. Lorenz 2 Decl. ¶ 15; McNicholas Decl. ¶¶ 8, 23, 28-29, 44-47; Bolan Decl. ¶ 8; Ettner Decl. ¶ 55. That 3 stigma—“imposition of a second-class status”—is “itself a harm of great constitutional 4 significance.” SmithKline Beecham, 740 F.3d at 482. “Ultimately, the consequence of the reduced 5 availability and quality of health services is worse health outcomes for patients and the public as a 6 whole.” California v. Azar, 2019 WL 1877392, at *10 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 26, 2019).

7 The regime that HHS seeks to create, which elevates religious objections over all other 8 concerns, also violates the constitutional rights of Plaintiffs and their patients. “It is well established 9 that the deprivation of constitutional rights ‘unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.’” 10 Melendres v. Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 11 373 (1976)). When a plaintiff raises even a “colorable claim” of a First Amendment violation, that 12 itself is sufficient to establish irreparable injury. Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 1002 (9th 13 Cir. 2005). The Rule’s many immediate harms provide good reason to enjoin its enforcement.

14 B. The Rule Will Require Plaintiff Healthcare Providers to Incur Substantial, 15 Unrecoverable Costs

16 Certain Plaintiffs, including the County, have adopted policies and practices that 17 accommodate and respect religious objections while ensuring patient care and operational stability.
18 See Lorenz Decl. ¶ 11. If the Rule goes into effect, those Plaintiffs will immediately incur 19 significant costs to review their policies and practices and create new ones in an effort to comply 20 with the Rule. See Lorenz Decl. ¶ 20; Burkhart Decl. ¶¶ 13, 18, 27. These costs are not recoverable, 21 and they constitute irreparable harm. See California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558, 581 (9th Cir. 2018) 22 (noting that the APA makes no allowance for monetary damages, and thus economic harms are 23 irreparable in APA challenges).

24 Because the Rule expands the categories of employees who may invoke objections, the 25 costs and administrative burdens associated with managing employees’ religious and moral 26 objections will increase substantially. Under the County’s current policies, religious objectors must 27 make their managers aware of their objections in advance to permit staffing arrangements that avoid 28 compromising patient care. Lorenz Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. A; see Tullys Decl. ¶ 9 (describing provider

1 requiring prior notice of covered services); Butler Decl. ¶ 5 (same). Workers may raise objections
2 only to the direct provision of care. Lorenz Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. A. Under the Rule, the burden will shift 3 to providers to ask essentially every employee (rather than just medical staff) about any objections 4 that the employee might have to any job duties, even those duties only remotely connected to patient
5 care. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,186-23,187 (stating that “[s]cheduling an abortion” or “preparing a 6 room and the instruments for an abortion” constitute “assistance”). If the Rule goes into effect, the 7 County will be forced to bear the costs of asking thousands of employees those questions and 8 processing the responses. See Lorenz Decl. ¶ 12. Those administrative costs also are an irreparable 9 harm. See California, 911 F.3d at 581.

10 The requirement that the County change its policies to comply with the Rule also conflicts 11 with the County’s power as a local government to craft policies and procedures that are tailored to 12 community needs. In threatening to cut off hundreds of millions of dollars in federal funding, HHS 13 will be unlawfully coercing the County to force it to adopt federal policy, contravening the 14 Spending Clause and overstepping the Executive Branch’s constitutional role. See Nat’l Fed’n of 15 Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519, 581 (2012). That coercion will cause irreparable harm to the 16 County. See Cnty. of Santa Clara v. Trump, 250 F. Supp. 3d 497, 538 (N.D. Cal. 2017) (“By forcing 17 the Counties to make this unreasonable choice [between complying with an unconstitutional 18 Executive Order and losing millions of dollars in federal grants], the Order results in a constitutional 19 injury sufficient to establish . . . irreparable harm.”).

20 C. The Rule Will Compromise Plaintiffs’ Operations, Missions, And Core 21 Functions

22 The Rule will jeopardize Plaintiffs’ ability to ensure high quality, compassionate, and 23 culturally competent care and to comply with their legal obligations and medical ethics 24 requirements. Even if Plaintiff providers are able to survey all their employees promptly about 25 religion-based objections, they likely still will not be able to ensure proper patient care. The Rule 26 bars reassignment of employees without their consent, potentially even when an employee cannot 27 fulfill his job duties because of his religious objections. See 84 Fed. Reg. 23,191-23,192 (stating 28 that religious objections must not disqualify a person from a job position and leaving unanswered

1 what happens if the objected-to activities are core job duties). Thus, Plaintiffs may be unable to 2 address religious objections through accommodations and reassignments. See Nguyen Decl. ¶ 5.
3 This will interfere with providers’ ability to ensure proper care and will harm patients across the 4 country.

5 For example, a pharmacist in the County’s health system who is the only pharmacist on site
6 may refuse to dispense contraception, see Singh Decl. ¶¶ 9-10; a receptionist may refuse to schedule
7 a transgender patient for an appointment to discuss gender-affirming care, see Nguyen Decl. ¶ 6; 8 or a healthcare professional may refuse to inform a pregnant person that their pregnancy is non-9 viable, McNicholas Decl. ¶ 23; Phelps Decl. ¶ 25. An employee could object even to passing along 10 the patient’s information and requests to a coworker. As a result, the patient may not receive the 11 care they seek. See Nguyen Decl. ¶¶ 6, 9; Butler Decl. ¶ 8. The Rule will compromise providers’ 12 ability to deliver care, and so it will cause irreparable harm. California, 2019 WL 1877392, at *8.

13 The Rule will frustrate all Plaintiffs’ core missions of providing high-quality, 14 nondiscriminatory healthcare. Barnes Decl. ¶¶ 11, 22-25; Burkhart Decl. ¶ 30. That alone is 15 irreparable harm. See California, 2019 WL 1877392, at *8 (HHS regulation restricting Title X 16 grants imposed likely harm on organizational plaintiffs’ “mission to promote access to high-quality 17 healthcare”). Patients subject to these religious objections will, justifiably, lose trust in healthcare 18 providers, compromising the patient-provider relationship and undermining the providers’ 19 missions. Lorenz Decl. ¶ 15; Cody Decl. ¶ 8. For example, communities rely on Trust Women 20 Seattle and Hartford Gyn as safe places for them to receive nonjudgmental care and information.
21 Were these clinics to lose their ability to protect patients from delayed and denied care, stigma, and 22 judgment, they would sacrifice their central missions. Barnes Decl. ¶¶ 20-23; Burkhart Decl. ¶¶ 26, 23 30.

24 Providers and patients will suffer significant harm because, although providers previously 25 have been able to expect all staff to assist patients in the event of an emergency, the Rule includes 26 no emergency exception and in fact contemplates that religious objectors can deny care in an 27 emergency. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 23,176. The Rule consciously declines to address what providers 28 can require of their employees in an emergency. See id. at 23,176. This will threaten patient safety

1 and cause irreparable harm from the moment the Rule goes into effect. See City & Cnty. of S.F., 2 897 F.3d at 1244 (need for certainty about how to maintain federal funding justified a permanent 3 injunction). This lack of clarity is especially problematic given providers’ obligation to comply 4 with EMTALA. In the face of this uncertainty, the only way that providers could both ensure patient 5 safety and protect their federal funding would be to double staff in preparation for objections during 6 emergencies—a prohibitively expensive practice. Nguyen Decl. ¶ 6; Lorenz Decl. ¶ 19; Burkhart
7 Decl. ¶ 30.

8 Moreover, without certainty on how to comply and keep their federal funding, the 9 healthcare provider Plaintiffs’ ability to budget, plan for the future, and properly serve their patients 10 would be irreparably harmed. See Cnty. of Santa Clara, 250 F. Supp. 3d at 537. And providers like 11 the County would face immediate exposure to punitive penalties for any asserted violation of the 12 Rule. If despite the County’s best efforts, an OCR official believes that the County has failed to 13 comply, the County could lose all federal funding—which would devastate its ability to continue 14 providing care to patients. See Lorenz Decl. ¶ 24; Cody Decl. ¶ 19 (“Many, if not most, of the 15 individuals served through the Public Health Department’s various programs simply would not get 16 the care and resources that they need without federally funded services.”).

17 It is already the case that religion-based objections to care by institutions and individuals 18 are pushing abortion and contraception care and training out of healthcare facilities across the 19 country. Phelps Decl. ¶ 35. Under the Rule, there will likely be even more hospitals and facilities 20 that will be forced to forgo providing abortion, contraception, or LGBT services entirely.
21 McNicholas Decl. ¶ 27; Phelps Decl. ¶ 29; Shafi Decl. ¶ 15. That discontinuation of services by 22 some providers would impose additional financial burdens on providers that continue to provide 23 full reproductive and LGBT healthcare services, as patients would look to them to serve the needs
24 previously met elsewhere. See Vargas Decl. ¶ 17; Shanker Decl. ¶ 9; Shafi Decl. ¶¶ 20-22; 25 Cummings Decl. ¶¶ 15-16. For example, Medical Students for Choice (“MSFC”) already struggles 26 to meet the need for family planning training, and it anticipates that under the Rule, it will not have 27 capacity to instruct the growing number of medical students and residents who want and need 28 education in contraception and abortion. Phelps Decl. ¶ 49. If healthcare entities decide to stop

1 providing abortion and contraceptive care and associated training to avoid conflict with the Rule, 2 it will devastate access to that care throughout the country. Backus Decl. ¶ 18; Phelps Decl. ¶¶ 30, 3 35.

4 Some Plaintiffs will need to redirect their resources to helping patients deal with the Rule’s 5 effects, frustrating their missions and causing them irreparable harm. Cf. Havens Realty Corp. v.
6 Coleman, 455 U.S. 363, 379 (1982). For example, Center on Halsted has already redirected 7 resources to providing information to its clients about the Rule and to holding internal trainings on 8 it. Valle Decl. ¶ 16. And GLMA has also had to divert resources to educate and assist its members 9 and their patients in understanding the Rule and coming up with ways to ameliorate its adverse 10 effects. Vargas Decl. ¶ 15.

11 III. THE BALANCE OF THE EQUITIES FAVORS PLAINTIFFS, AND AN 12 INJUNCTION IS IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST

13 The Court “must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on 14 each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief,” while paying “particular regard 15 for the public consequences” of entering or withholding injunctive relief. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20, 16 24. When the government is the defendant, those inquiries merge, resulting in a balancing that turns 17 on the public interest. Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435-36 (2009).

18 It is in the public interest to permit Plaintiffs’ hospitals and other healthcare facilities to 19 continue operating and serving patients. Many of them are facilities of last resort for patients.
20 Manley Decl. ¶ 7; Shafi Decl. ¶¶ 18-20; Cummings Decl. ¶¶ 9-13; Valle Decl. ¶¶ 5-7, 14. The 21 prevention of widespread public-health harms vastly outweighs any interest that HHS can claim in 22 immediate enforcement of the Rule. See California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558, 582 (9th Cir. 2018) (in 23 an APA challenge to HHS rules about contraceptive coverage, the balance of equities favored a 24 preliminary injunction because the rules risked “potentially dire public health and fiscal 25 consequences” in contravention of the “public interest in access to contraceptive care”). An 26 injunction also would prevent an upheaval in medical practice, which the medical community has 27 vigorously opposed. See AMA Cmt. Ltr. 7.

1 Plaintiffs also have demonstrated that the likely result of the Rule’s enforcement against 2 them is a violation of their patients’ constitutional rights, which must outweigh any interest that 3 HHS has in immediate changes to Plaintiffs’ practices. See Melendres, 695 F.3d at 1002 (final 4 factors of preliminary-injunction standard always weigh in favor of “prevent[ing] the violation of 5 a party’s constitutional rights”); Planned Parenthood Ass’n of Cincinnati, Inc. v. Cincinnati, 822 6 F.2d 1390, 1400 (6th Cir. 1987) (similar). This harm outweighs any government interest in 7 immediate enforcement of the Rule.

8 Because there will be many immediate harms to providers, patients, and the public health if 9 the Rule is enforced, and no harms to the government if the Rule is delayed, the public interest 10 clearly favors freezing the status quo pending final resolution of Plaintiffs’ claims.

11 IV. THE COURT SHOULD ENTER A NATIONWIDE INJUNCTION

12 The Court’s authority to issue a nationwide injunction is well-established. See, e.g., Texas 13 v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 188 (5th Cir. 2015) (“It is not beyond the power of a court, in 14 appropriate circumstances, to issue a nationwide injunction.”). “[T]he scope of injunctive relief is 15 dictated by the extent of the violation established, not by the geographical extent of the plaintiff.” E.
16 Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 909 F.3d 1219, 1255 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting Califano v.
17 Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702 (1979)). There is “no general requirement that an injunction affect 18 only the parties in the suit.” Regents of the Univ. of Cal., 908 F.3d at 511 (quoting Bresgal v. Brock, 19 843 F.2d 1163, 1169 (9th Cir. 1987)). Instead, “[a]n injunction may extend ‘benefit or protection’ 20 to nonparties if such breadth is necessary to give prevailing parties the relief to which they are 21 entitled.” E. Bay, 909 F.3d at 1255 (internal quotation marks omitted); accord Azar, 911 F.3d at 22 582.

23 Nationwide relief is necessary to forestall the significant harms threatened here. Plaintiffs 24 are located throughout the United States and include three nationwide associations of medical 25 professionals (MSFC, AGLP, and GLMA) whose members work in hundreds, if not thousands, of 26 healthcare facilities across the country. See Vargas Decl. ¶ 2; Phelps Decl. ¶ 3; Harker Decl. ¶ 2. A 27 nationwide injunction therefore is required simply to give complete relief to the Plaintiffs in this 28 case. The Rule will frustrate MSFC’s mission by incentivizing “the limited number of remaining

1 programs training students and residents in abortion and contraception to discontinue family 2 planning training.” Backus Decl. ¶ 11. The Rule will undermine GLMA’s mission of ensuring 3 nondiscriminatory care for LGBT patients across the country, Vargas Decl. ¶¶ 1-2, not only by 4 encouraging providers to raise more religious objections but by intimidating professional 5 accreditation bodies “from holding healthcare providers accountable for discrimination against 6 LGBTQ people.” Id. ¶ 10. The Rule will frustrate AGLP’s mission of promoting LGBTQ mental 7 health and supporting personal growth for LGBTQ psychiatrists by undermining “safe work spaces 8 for LGBTQ psychiatrists and nondiscriminatory healthcare services to [their] LGBTQ patients.”
9 Harker Decl. ¶¶ 1, 6, 9, 10. These harms can be avoided only if the Rule is enjoined as to everyone.

10 Plaintiff healthcare providers also will be deprived of complete relief if the injunction is 11 limited to the parties in this case. An injunction limited to the parties here will not “prevent the . . .
12 harm . . . detailed in the record.” Azar, 911 F.3d at 584. If Plaintiffs do not have to comply with the 13 Rule, but all other healthcare providers do, Plaintiffs will become the only option for avoiding the 14 risk of discrimination. That will impose immense burdens on Plaintiffs’ operations. The Rule would 15 hamper not only Plaintiffs’ “ability to provide services to their current clients,” but also “their 16 ability to pursue their programs writ large.” E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 354 F. Supp. 3d 17 1094, 1121 (N.D. Cal. 2018).

18 Finally, Plaintiffs have established that the Rule violates the APA—a paradigmatic 19 circumstance for enjoining a regulation nationwide. Regents, 908 F.3d at 511-12 (nationwide 20 injunctive “relief is commonplace in APA cases”). “In this context, [w]hen a reviewing court 21 determines that agency regulations are unlawful, the ordinary result is that the rules are vacated—22 not that their application to the individual petitioners is proscribed.” Id. at 511 (quoting Nat’l 23 Mining Ass’n v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng’rs, 145 F.3d 1399, 1409 (D.C. Cir. 1998)). The Rule’s 24 harms will be immediate and severe, and they will occur nationwide. But this Court can avoid them 25 simply by putting the Rule on pause.

26 CONCLUSION

27 The Court should preliminarily enjoin implementation of the Rule.
